

Dear Hiring Manager,

I have been on the hunt for a role that would be an exciting challenge at a great company. When I was contacted about this role for UX researcher at [REDACTED], I couldn't be more excited!

As a UX researcher for the past 7-8 years within a tech savvy and high growth academic setting, I have cultivated a number of skills that I think would make me a great candidate for this role. I have self-started numerous successful projects which have involved designing web-mapping tools, developing virtual dashboards, evaluating educational computer systems, and creating online and in-classroom courses for high school students. Plus, I have been the lead UX researcher for multiple interdisciplinary collaborative research teams, each focused on developing user-centered solutions for complex problems.

I bring user experience (UX) thinking to new and exciting projects. I love working in software and I'm looking for my next challenge where I can drive innovation with a product I'm truly passionate about. I am excited about this role and opportunity and know that I could bring my proficiency at all phases in the product design and research process to support and enhance [REDACTED]'s existing ability to drive one-to-one consumer engagement.

I very much look forward to hearing back from you and getting the chance to discuss the role further.

~

Thank you,

Garrett C. Millar